MEKCO Group Aviation Powers Inflight Entertainment and Sales with AirFi America

MEKCO Group Aviation is constantly searching for innovative ways to improve the passenger experience while keeping costs low for airlines and is leading the charge with our IFE and Connectivity division, AirFi America and the product, AirFi, a unique inflight entertainment (IFE) and connectivity solution.

Bill Ulsch, President and CEO of MEKCO Group Aviation, reveals how AirFi is changing the game for airlines by providing a one-stop solution for entertainment, onboard sales and messaging services.

AirFi's wireless IFE system allows passengers to enjoy movies, TV shows and other content while simultaneously serving as a point of sale device for cabin crews to sell food, beverages and duty-free items. AirFi allows passengers to use their own devices for entertainment, thereby reducing airlines' IFE maintenance costs.

The system also includes in-flight connectivity with payment validation, crew and passenger messaging with global coverage. This cost-effective and scalable solution is perfect for various aircraft types, from large commercial planes to regional carriers. Traditional IFE systems come with high maintenance costs and complex installations, however AirFi installation is quick and straightforward. An aircraft such as an Airbus takes about 70 hours while a 777 requires just two days to complete, for example. Removal of AirFi's units is even faster.

"Let's say an aircraft is leased and now it's time to return that aircraft back to its lessor," Ulsch says. "They can remove this system in a matter of hours so that team and be able to install it on another aircraft. So your investment moves with you – you don't leave it behind."

The AirFiFi is a truly adaptable and highly-able, making it an ideal solution for various aircraft.
